

Summary of the Dataset

In the vast realm of data-driven research, the effective organization and annotation of image datasets play a pivotal role in extracting meaningful insights. Therefore, we created an annotation file to map the images of the dataset, with the subject from which we have collected the dataset. This document focuses on the structure of the folders, identification of the subject's unique identifier, referred to as the Subject ID, the recording of the geographical origin of the subject, specifically the village from which it was obtained, and the list of skins that are not arsenic affected but have resemblances.

1. Structure of the folders of the Dataset

From the root folder, we can find two folders- Original and Augmented. Both of these folders share the same structures. There are two folders- Affected and Healthy. Inside these folders, the images can be found. As for the “Original” directory, each of the Affected and Healthy contains 741 images, and in the “Augmented” director, the numbers are 4446. Figure 1 depicts the total illustration of the structure.

2. Mapping the Subject IDs, Their Location, and Labels of the Images from the Dataset

The detailed identification of the subject is not disclosed due to ethical reasons. Instead, we have provided an identification number to specify the individuals. Table 1 holds the information on arsenic-infected patients' images. The first column represents the subject ID, the second column denotes the specific village of the subject, and the third column contains labels for all images collected from that particular individual. We collected 741 images from 37 affected individuals and another 741 from 76 healthy individuals.

The provided dataset intends to provide visual information about some specific areas of Bangladesh. Hopefully, this dataset will be beneficial to researchers who are interested in working in dermatology and enhance practical use with the help of computer vision.
